LIVING WELL WITH DEPRESSION

Fall/Winter 2022

Make a crisis prevention plan

Depression is a serious illness. If you have depression, it can change how you feel and think. It can even make you feel like hurting yourself.

It's good to remember this, though: those thoughts are a symptom of your illness. You won't always feel that way — and treatment can help you enjoy life again.

Treatments for depression take time to work. That's why it's important to stick with them. In the meantime, take steps like these to protect yourself:

Put dangers out of reach. Get rid of any weapons, pills or other things you might use to hurt yourself.

Manage your moods. Work with a therapist to learn what sets off a crisis, how to spot your warning signs and what to do about them.

Make a list of lifelines. These are trusted family members and friends you can talk to if you start to feel bad. Have the numbers of your doctor and the suicide hotline (988) close by or in your phone too. If you have thoughts of suicide, call one of your lifelines or 911 — or go to a hospital right away.

It's not too late!

Flu shots are especially important this year. People at high risk for getting very sick from COVID-19 should get one as soon as possible. If you haven't had yours yet, don't wait.

Taking antidepressants wisely

Sad. Hopeless. Empty. That's how many people with depression feel.

If you've been diagnosed with depression, there are things you can do to feel better. Treatment can help you enjoy life again.

If your treatment plan includes medicines, here are a few things to know:

They don't all work the same way. Different antidepressants work in different ways. They're meant to change the brain chemicals that regulate mood.

They need time to work. You may need to take them for up to six weeks to feel the full effect.

Some people aren't helped by their first antidepressant. You may need to try several types — or a combination — to find what works best for you.

Don't stop taking your medicine. You may want to stop taking your medicine as you start to feel better, but don't. If you stop too soon, your depression may come back.

Talk therapy may help your medicine work better. Antidepressants often work best when combined with talk therapy. Seeing your therapist regularly can help you stay on track with your treatment goals and learn helpful coping techniques.
